Soft Bank's Son challenges investors to 'feel the force' of his $32 billion ARM gamble

SoftBank Corp (9984.T) founder Masayoshi Son, who created a $68 billion tech investment behemoth from a $50,000 start-up, has divided investors and analysts with his latest "crazy idea", the $32 billion acquisition of chip designer ARM Holdings (ARM.L). Visionary, risky, or both, the deal announced on Monday caught them all on the hop. But in the way it was struck and presented, they all recognized the signature style of the man whose chutzpah led to successes like early investments in Yahoo! (YHOO.O) and Chinese e-commerce company Alibaba (BABA.N), which briefly made him Japan's richest man.

Many investors had been hoping Son would use cash from recent asset sales to buy back shares or pay down its hefty debt, so SoftBank's Tokyo shares were hit by a glut of sell orders on Tuesday morning, trading down almost 11 percent.

"A fresh acquisition is not what the market wants from SoftBank," said Mitsushige Akino, chief fund manager at Ichiyoshi Asset Management. "It's Mr. Son's style to keep expanding, but isn't he stretching too much?" Investors fret the purchase of ARM, Japan's largest ever outbound deal, may be too much for SoftBank, still in the throes of turning around U.S. carrier Sprint (S.N) and tackling a $112 billion debt pile.

"There is little synergy with SoftBank's existing businesses, but it makes sense if we look at ARM's future potential," said Tomoaki Kawasaki, senior analyst at IwaiCosmo Securities Co.

"Mr. Son is prioritizing investment for the future over shoring up the balance sheet. It's very Mr. Son-like."

A self-made entrepreneur whom one investment banker described as thinking "in decades", Son, of Korean descent, has long been something of an outsider in corporate Japan.

He wears the somber suits of ARM, Japan's largest ever outbound deal, may be too much for SoftBank, still in the throes of turning around U.S. carrier Sprint (S.N) and tackling a $112 billion debt pile.

When presenting the ARM deal, he breezily dismissed his doubters.

deal to investors and analysts in London on Monday, he quoted Yoda, the diminutive Star Wars Jedi Master, with an urging to "listen to the force", and told them Jack Ma, founder of Alibaba, had called immediately to discuss a partnership.

Until last month, Son, known as "Masa", had been on the way out. Instead, the 58-year-old abruptly scrapped retirement plans and said he would stay on to create "SoftBank 2.0" and work on "a few more crazy ideas".

When presenting the ARM deal, he breezily dismissed his doubters.

Gujarat to set up designated court for trial of accused in Dalit atrocity case of Una Gandhinagar: Gujarat Chief Minister Anandiben Patel today announced setting up a special designated court in consultation with the High Court for the trial of accused in the Dalit atrocity case that took place at Una in Gir-Somnath district on July 11, 2016. Looking to the sensitive nature of the event, she personally met the elected representatives, prominent citizens and other leaders from the Gir-Somnath and Una areas to seize the gravity of the situation. An FIR has been filed at the Una Police Station against Vashrambhai Balubhai Sarvaiya's six men under the Atrocity Eight persons have been detained. Meanwhile, the Government has suspended one PI, two ASI and one Head Constable for inaction. The case is now being investigated by Deputy Police Superintendent of SC/ST Cell.

The Chief Minister directed the authorities concerned to take sternest action against the accused as per the rule. She decided to handover the case to CID Crime Branch to ensure impartial prosecution.

She said the district administration has paid Rs. one lakh to each victim as per the provisions. The District Collector has visited the victims under treatment at the hospitals at Una, Rajkot and Junagadh, as also Gujarat's Minister Jashabhai Barad and Parliamentary Secretary Jethabhai Solanki.

United States joins case over Facebook data transfers from EU

The United States can join a landmark case on the legality of cross-border data transfers, an Irish court ruled on Tuesday in a move that gives U.S. authorities a platform to defend their surveillance laws before the European Union's top court. The U.S. authorities had asked the Irish High Court to be a party to the case taken by Austrian privacy activist Max Schrems against Facebook, which has its European headquarters in Dublin, over data transfers from the EU to the United States. The case, which aims to determine whether personal privacy is properly protected from U.S. government surveillance, is expected to be referred to the Court of Justice of the European Union (CJEU) following a request by Irish data protection authorities in May.

Don't let monsoon spoil your health! : Dr Wasim Ahmed Sachora

Ahmedabad, Monsoon does bring the much needed relief from the sweltering heat to the summer but it also brings its own set of problems along. With rains and rise in humidity, a number of viral, bacterial and fungal infections become active. Cases of dengue, malaria, conjunctivitis and a series of viral infections rise. The humid weather may also cause dehydration.

Drink sufficient water: High levels of humidity mean that we sweat a lot in monsoon. Dehydration is a logical outcome. "Keeping yourself hydrated is essential during monsoon as it is throughout the year. Drink sufficient quality of water to keep your body and skin hydrated. This also gives the body resilience to fight infections and prevents dehydration. Adequate water also helps flush out toxins," says Dr Wasim Ahmed Sachora, Internal Medicine, and Columbia Asia Hospital-Ahmedabad.

Prevent bacterial and fungal infections: Monsoon is a season when a lot of bacterial and fungal infections thrive because the temperature and moisture in the environment is suitable for their growth. To prevent infections of the skin, it is important to avoid keeping your skin wet for longer duration. Dampness triggers fungal infections. Use anti-bacterial soaps, creams and talc to keep bacterial and fungal problems at bay, especially if you are susceptible to infections. (19-10)

Netflix customer growth slows amid price hike, shares plunge

Netflix Inc (NFLX.O) said it added fewer video streaming subscribers than expected from April through June as some customers cancelled the service ahead of a price increase, and the company's shares fell 16 percent.

The dominant subscription video service on Monday also forecast slower-than-expected growth in U.S. and international markets in the current quarter. "We are growing, but not as fast as we would like or have been," the company said in its quarterly letter to shareholders.

Netflix, which distributes popular original shows such as "Orange is the New Black" and "House of Cards" along with movies and TV shows from major Hollywood studios, signed up 1.7 million new customers in the quarter that ended in June. It had projected 2.5 million.

The company has been phasing in price hikes for existing customers by $1 or $2 per month. Cancellations "ticked up slightly and unexpectedly" in early April amid press coverage about the coming increases, the Netflix letter said.

For the current quarter, the company predicted it will add 300,000 U.S. subscribers and 2 million in markets outside the United States. That includes "an impact from the spectacle of the Olympics," the company said.

Analysts on average expect Netflix to sign up 774,000 new subscribers in the United States and 2.85 million in the international markets, according to research firm FactSet StreetAccount.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Kudos to Ms. May

KUDOS to 59-year-old Ms. May for Britain's second female Prime Minister after Margaret Thatcher. After many decades, England has a second May to watch, with almost breathless anticipation and fear of the worst. Theresa May takes over at a tough turn in the UK's history. There is dissent over Brexit. She has shown herself to be astute at business end of politics. As PM May has a very full and difficult agenda, a weakened near-term economy, little spare money in the budget and no party-conviction to deliver on her rhetoric she will have to face many more challenges.
